AUTHOR'S NOTE

"Hi, it's me, the person who decided to give Aki way too many chains and lanterns. Honestly, I thought drawing spirals would be easy — turns out they never end (literally, like the curse itself). I may or may not have accidentally summoned something while practicing puddle reflections. My neighbors now avoid me because they heard me whispering 'Chimichi' at 3 AM. If this chapter scared you, good... because it scared me too, and I MADE it. I keep checking puddles on rainy nights, and I swear I saw Aki smirking at me once. If you see me wandering Tokyo muttering about chains, just pat me on the back and say, 'good filler.' This is technically a filler, but don't tell Aki that — he'd chain me for calling him one. I'll keep drawing as long as my pens don't revolt against all this blood ink. Okay, enough rambling... please enjoy this nightmare on paper."

ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

“First of all, thanks to my poor pen, which has seen more ink blood than actual ink. Shoutout to coffee, for being my only real co-author (I owe you my soul; and maybe some chains). Thanks to my readers, who bravely keep turning pages despite the risk of getting pulled into Chimichi. Big love to Aki – terrifying, brooding, but still stylish enough to get his own filler. To Mina, who doesn’t appear here but will probably scold Aki for the mess later. A quick thanks to my desk lamp, which flickered during the drawing of this chapter... creepy coincidence or free horror ambience? Also, my neighbors, for pretending the scratching noises weren’t me drawing chains at ungodly hours. Huge thanks to Chimichi Street for haunting my dreams and inspiring me against my will.

ア キ の 弧

This standalone story
explores a single cursed night on Chimichi — where Aki faces not only the
spirits of the street,
but the reflection of his own blood-stained self.

A violent glimpse into his past, this filler reveals the fragile balance between the man he is, and the monster he fears he will become.
